Working with breweries to strengthen their brand through packaging

Brewer's Corner

The latest news and views articles collated from the world of beer.

Let's lead with the sad news that over the past week three English breweries, Kelham Island, Beatnikz Republic and Exe Valley are closing. It seems certain that there will be more to come this year, as breweries fatally wounded by the pandemic, finally succumb to commercial pressures.

READ THE ARTICLE

The Pub Curmudgeon took one for the team recently by setting out on a pub crawl of keg-only, non-craft pubs in Stockport, one of which attracted the memorable quote... "A shithole is the only description required of the pub."

With cask representing just one seventh of all beer being sold in pubs these days, it seems like such experiences will become more common, although one has to wonder about the long-term viability of a business that takes so little interest in providing a quality product to it's customers.

Jeff had an interesting trip this week to a winery that has recently got into beer as well.

Let's hope this is one aspect of the Craft Beer Experience that we don't end up importing from the USA!

Finally a survey this week on behalf of 'A Plastic Planet' reported that 89% of people surveyed would like plastic cups banned in hospitality. This wasn't because they want more drinkers to end up in A&E, but apparently to save the Planet!

In our experience, most responsible UK Taprooms are serving biodegradable plastic cups these days, so this should probably be the direction of travel.

Festival Review

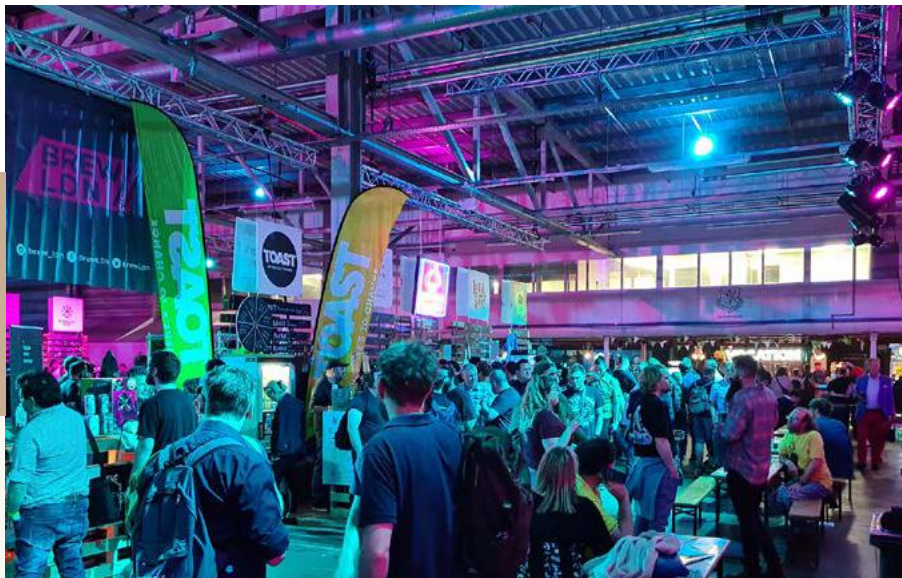

ROB CHESHIRE
CO FOUNDER TWICB

Brew LDN, London

The Printworks, Surrey Quays Rd, Rotherhithe, London, SE16 7PJ

Friday marked the official start of summer for TWICB, as we attended our first Festival of the season, at BrewLDN. Originally known as Craft Beer Rising, BrewLDN has stood the test of time as being one of the longest tenured Craft Beer Festivals on the UK calendar.

Brew LDN stands out for us for two reasons. Firstly it is one of the only truly equitable Craft Festivals, in that Breweries "book" to attend rather than being invited. Secondly they run a trade-only session, where the UK Industry gathers to chat and drink with friends, old and new.

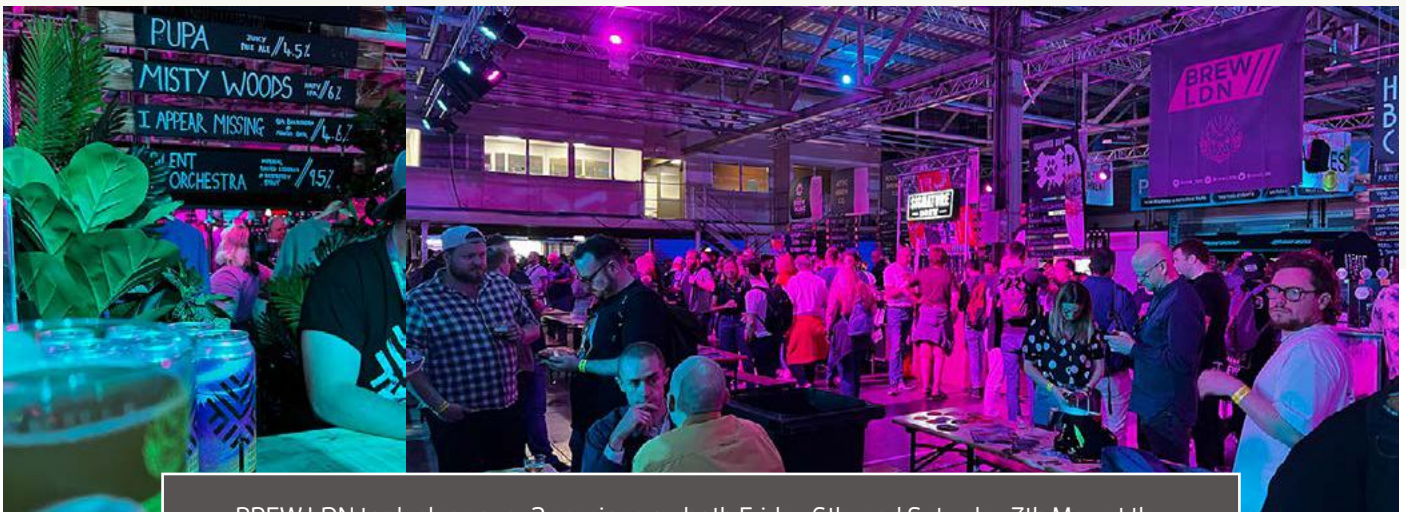

The first point means that it is open to any Brewery that is prepared to ante-up the pitch fee, which provides a platform for up and coming businesses to back themselves to expose their beer to the London drinking public.

Festival Review

One of our local Reading favourites, Double Barrelled, did exactly that at Craft Beer Rising 2018, and haven't looked back since! It remains to be seen who will emerge as the break-out star from BrewLDN 2022, but we have several on our shortlist!

The trade-only session is accessible free of charge to anyone with some sort of vague Industry credentials (they have been letting us in for several years, so they can't be very discerning!), and is a wonderful networking opportunity.

BREW LDN took place over 2 sessions on both Friday 6th, and Saturday 7th May at the Printworks, near Canada Water, which proved a perfect venue for this type of craft beer event.

The venue at the Printworks near Canada Water Station is the perfect size for an event like this, with four large interconnected halls and with a substantial outdoor courtyard, which benefitted this year from glorious sunshine!

If you haven't been to BrewLDN before, we would strongly suggest that you make the effort in 2023. You will definitely get the chance to drink beers from some UK Craft Brewers that you haven't come across before, alongside a decent selection of household names.

The modest ticket prices for the public sessions, along with the pay-as-you-drink model also makes it a good event to drag along your Craft-curious friends, who perhaps aren't quite ready to fork out the £50+ for an all-you-can-drink ticket.
